

How to give from retirement accounts and other tax-deferred investments

Charitable gifts may be made through the beneficiary designations of retirement plan assets such as a 401(k), 403(b), IRA, Keogh, deferred annuity and other tax-deferred investments. These assets are accumulated primarily on a pre-tax and/or tax deferred basis and may be assigned after death by beneficiary designation to family members, loved ones and charities such as Unbound.

Many donors are surprised to learn that the assets accumulated in their retirement plans are among the most tax-burdened assets they own. As a result, all assets remaining in your retirement accounts directed to anyone other than your spouse will be subject to income taxes. This includes distributions to all other family members and loved ones.

A better option may be to name Unbound as the beneficiary of your retirement plan accounts and designate other assets as gifts to your heirs. This eliminates the income tax burden on the share of retirement account assets assigned to Unbound, and may provide a potential charitable estate tax deduction for your heirs on the full value of your gift.

To initiate this process will require written notification to your financial institution or retirement plan administrator requesting a change to your beneficiary designation. The following information is provided for your reference:
